From The Helm

It has been a remarkable year for the Texas Navy Association. Completing the movie and getting it in the hands of the seventh grade teachers. The opening of the Texas Navy exhibit on the USS Lexington was extremely well received. Many thanks to Bill Turner for his efforts. The product is extraordinary. Texas Navy Rum has been a big hit and a great success. If you have not had a chance to try this outstanding product, please rush to your nearest Spec's and pick up a case for the holidays. Search for Invincible is officially underway. This will be the biggest and most expensive undertaking that we have ever done. Your help and support are greatly appreciated. A special thanks to Andy Hall for his efforts. Thanks to Jeff Corbin and the Toby squadron for their fund raising on behalf of the project. A very special thanks to Adm. Richard Weitzel and the Samuel May Williams squadron for their remarkable growth year. I'll bet they will Commission their 20th new Admiral before the end of the year. For 2019, we expect to stand up a squadron in Corpus Christi, do a museum project in San Antonio, develop a mini theater in Fredericksburg, organize a museum project in Dallas, move on to the next phase of the search for Invincible and grow the TNA by 30%. In order to have a chance of success with these goals, we need your help to not only be a member but take on some responsibility in some of these wonderful projects. The Texas Navy Association has a lot to be grateful for. With your help and support, we can continue to grow our success.

God bless Texas and the Texas Navy Association!

Phase 1 Survey on Potential Invincible Site Completed

By: Admiral Andy Hall

Texas Navy Friends and Colleagues:

The field work for the Invincible magnetometer survey was completed on Saturday afternoon, November 10, by Bob Gearhart and his assistant, Ed Baxter. The raw data is in the box. They covered the entire area initially on Thursday and Friday, November 8 and 9, and after reviewing the data plot, used Saturday to run additional tracks where any data was missing, and then get additional data on some selected targets that seemed significant.

There are numerous anomalies across the 23-acre site. There are a few large anomalies that might be looked at using probing or sampling at some point in the future. There was nothing that immediately jumped out at Gearhart as obviously a shipwreck, but we do now have concrete data to work with. These are very preliminary findings, and will be refined later in his analysis and report, which will take several weeks more to complete. Gearhart has a database of 30 or so known wrecks that he's studied before, and can compare this new data with that, to get a better sense of what we might be looking at. Can we claim to have found Invincible? No. Can we be sure these anomalies are the remains of a vessel? Again, no. But this is a starting point for further study.

This project was done under a Phase I Survey permit issued to Gearhart by the Archaeology Division of the Texas Historical Commission, and reviewed and approved by representatives of the Galveston Parks Board and the City of Galveston.

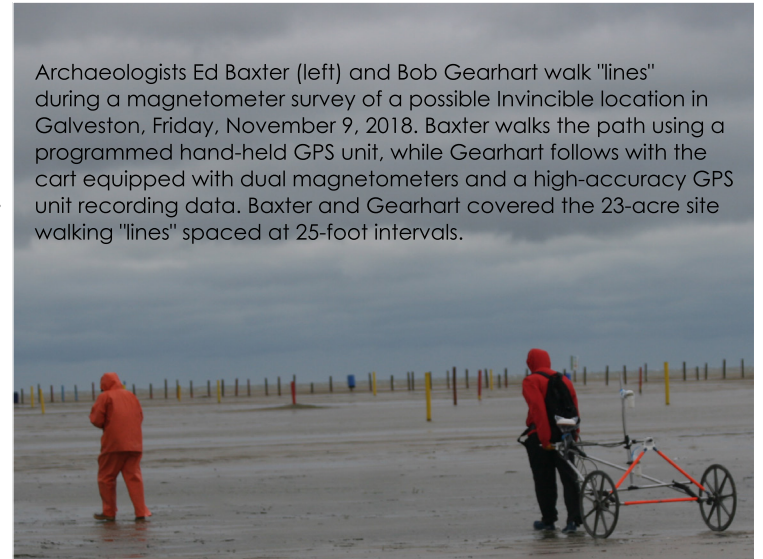

Gearhart is owner and principal of BOB Hydrographics, that specializes in hydrographic surveys supporting infrastructure and environmental projects on coastal and inland waters. Prior to establishing BOB Hydrographics, he served as hydrographer and marine archaeologist with several firms, notably with PBS&J, Inc. (1998-2010) and Espy, Huston & Associates (1984-92), that did extensive work surveying, recording, and analyzing shipwrecks in Texas coastal waters. Gearhart holds a BA in Anthropology from Iowa State University, and an MA in Anthropology from the University of Missouri – Columbia.

Gearhart led the archaeological team that recovered the remains of the Civil War gunboat USS Westfield, that was blown up at the end of the Battle of Galveston in 1863, and was long thought to have been lost. Of particular relevance to his role on the Invincible Project, he authored the chapter, "Archaeological Interpretation of Marine Magnetic Data" for the The Oxford Handbook of Maritime Archaeology, published by Oxford University Press in 2014.

A magnetometer is a passive system that detects fluctuations, or anomalies, in the earth's background magnetic field caused by ferrous metal, typically iron or steel. The readings can't give absolute values on the amount of metal, or create a visualization of what those sources look like. (I.e., an iron cannon wouldn't look like a cannon on the plot; it would look like a strong blurp in the normal, background magnetic field.) Importantly, this data also can't reliably indicate the depth of the objects causing the anomaly. We don't know what is at this location, but there is something (or perhaps some things) there. Once we receive Gearhart's final, technical report, we can start looking at the best ways to carry this work forward to the next step, that may be additional remote-sensing testing, sampling by probing or coring, or a combination of those things.

Archaeologists Ed Baxter (left) and Bob Gearhart walk "lines" during a magnetometer survey of a possible Invincible location in Galveston, Friday, November 9, 2018. Baxter walks the path using a programmed hand-held GPS unit, while Gearhart follows with the cart equipped with dual magnetometers and a high-accuracy GPS unit recording data. Baxter and Gearhart covered the 23-acre site walking "lines" spaced at 25-foot intervals.

The search for Invincible has been a long-standing project for the TNA, going back to the 1980s. It's involved lots of players over the years, including Clive Cussler's National Underwater and Marine Agency (NUMA). Many folks in the TNA have contributed time, effort, and funding to those efforts, and we appreciate their dedication to the project. The goal of finding Invincible has been kept current by many folks in the TNA, most recently by Adm. Will Fisher. It's been a long journey, and we hope that this survey will mark the beginning of a new and exciting phase of it.

In particular, it's taken a lot of work over the last eighteen months to bring the TNA to this point. I would like to extend my sincere thanks to several critical players in this process. Admirals Dick Hatch and Jerry Patterson, TNA President and Past President respectively, were unfailing in their support and encouragement. TNA Past President Adm. Bill Turner tackled the critical (and unenviable) task of fund-raising for the project, and Adm. Jeff Corbin and the Tom Toby Squadron organized a raffle for Warbird rides to raise money for the project. Adm. Tom Oertling developed the archival chart research that suggested this search area as a likely target for investigation. There were many others, besides, who contributed in ways large and small to bring us to this point.

Thomas Freeman McKinney (November 1, 1801 – October 2, 1873) was a trader, merchant, and a co-founder of Galveston, Texas. Living with his family in the western states of Kentucky, Illinois, and Missouri, he started trading in Mexico in 1823. The next year he settled in Stephen F. Austin's Colony, claiming a headright to Texas land while continuing his trading activities. He established a partnership with Samuel May Williams in 1834, and they operated a warehouse at the mouth of the Brazos River. The McKinney & Williams partnership loaned money and vessels to the cause of Texas independence. After Texas gained independence from Mexico, McKinney co-founded Galveston, Texas, and the McKinney & Williams company set up a warehouse and dock in the new town. McKinney later sold his share of the McKinney & Williams partnership and retired to Travis County, Texas. The McKinney & Williams partnership lent $99,000 to the cause for Texas independence. In September 1835, McKinney used his own schooner San Felipe to capture the Correo de Mexico. He borrowed against the credit of the partnership to buy the schooner Liberty in support of the rebellion. READ MORE

"Texas Flagship INDEPENDENCE Departing Galveston, 1836"

Artist's notes: Baltimore-built in 1831, the INDEPENDENCE was originally launched as the INGHAM, one of 13 U.S. Revenue Cutters of the Morris-Taney Class. She was sold to the Texas Republic in early 1836 for $1710, designated as Flagship, and armed with six 6-pounders and a pivot gun.

After the San Jacinto victory, she carried Texas President Burnet and prisoner-of-war General Santa Anna to sign the Treaty of Velasco. A year later in April 1837, the ship was trapped up the Brazos River by two Mexican brigs-of-war, and ultimately surrendered with her captain wounded after a running battle.
